STATUTES INVOLVED

This case involves section 309(c)(5) of the Illegal Immigration Reform and Immigrant Responsibility Act of 1996 ("IIRIRA"), Pub. L. No. 104-208, 110 Stat. 3009 (1996), as amended by section 203(a)(1) of the Nicaraguan Adjustment and Central American Relief Act ("NACARA"):

> Subject to subparagraphs (B) and (C), paragraphs (1) and (2) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (relating to continuous residence or physical presence) shall apply to orders to show cause (including those referred to in section 242B(a)(1) of the Immigration and Nationality Act, as in effect before the title III-A effective date), issued before, on, or after the date of enactment of this Act.

In addition, this case involves former 8 U.S.C. Sect. 1254(a)(2):

> (a) As hereinafter prescribed in this section, the Attorney General may, in his discretion, suspend deportation and adjust the status to that of an alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence, in the case of an alien (other than an alien described in section 241(a)(4)(D)) who applies to the Attorney General for suspension of deportation and-

> (2) is deportable under paragraph (2), (3), or (4) of section 241(a); has been physically present in the United States for a continuous period of not less than 10 years immediately following the commission of an act, or the assumption of a status, constituting a ground for deportation, and proves that during all of such period he has been and is a person of good moral character; and is a person whose deportation would, in the opinion of the Attorney General, result in exceptional and extremely unusual hardship to the alien or to his spouse, parent, or child, who is a citizen of the United States or an alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

I. Statement of Facts

Petitioner Tarek Elagamy is a native and citizen of Egypt. Certified Administrative Record ("A.R."), as filed with the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit in Case No. 97-60211, at 750, 791. On May 15, 1982, he was admitted to the U.S. as a nonimmigrant student. A.R. 8, 790.

On September 10, 1986, Mr. Elagamy was convicted in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Louisiana for having made a false statement under oath, under 18 U.S.C. Sect. 1546, regarding his marriage to a U.S. citizen. A.R. 8, 633, 742, 790-91. He was sentenced to five years' imprisonment (suspended), and placed on five years of active probation. A.R. 742.

II. Proceedings Below

INS issued an Order to Show Cause ("OSC") in Mr. Elagamy's case on December 17, 1986, charging him with deportability under former 8 U.S.C. Sect. 1251(a)(5). At a final administrative hearing held on April 20, 1988, Mr. Elagamy was found deportable as charged by an Immigration Judge ("IJ"). The IJ also denied his claim to political asylum under 8 U.S.C. Sect. 1158. A.R. at 684-91.

On June 24, 1992, the Board of Immigration Appeals ("BIA") dismissed Mr. Elagamy's appeal from the IJ's decision. A.R. 616-18. A motion to reopen was filed with the BIA on August 9, 1993, claiming eligibility for suspension of deportation under former 8 U.S.C. Sect. 1254(a)(2), which, as set forth above, requires a showing of ten years' residence and good moral character during said period. Mr. Elagamy argued that the offense that led to his conviction and deportability had been committed over ten years earlier, thus satisfying the statutory threshold. A.R. 463. The BIA denied reopening on February 9, 1995, holding that the requested relief was available only where ten years of good character had elapsed after the conviction date, not the date of commission of the offense. A.R. 432.

On September 16, 1996, Mr. Elagamy again moved for reopening, noting that his conviction was then over ten years old, and asking again for suspension of deportation. The BIA denied this motion on March 17, 1997, this time based on the "stop-time" rule of IIRIRA Sect. 309(c)(5), which, as quoted above, states that the accumulation of residence and good character time periods is cut off upon issuance of the OSC. The BIA applied this rule to Mr. Elagamy, even though the IIRIRA effective date of April 1, 1997 had not yet then been reached. A.R. 2-3. The BIA noted that one Federal Court had held this impermissible in Astrero v. INS, 104 F.3d 264 (9th Cir. 1996), but refused to follow Astrero outside the Ninth Circuit. A.R. 3.

Mr. Elagamy filed a Petition for Review with the U.S. Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals, arguing inter alia that under Astrero he was suspension-eligible. On November 29, 2001, the Fifth Circuit upheld Mr. Elagamy's deportation order, holding in an unpublished decision that his Astrero argument was foreclosed by its own precedent in Gonzalez-Torres v. INS, 213 F.3d 899 (5th Cir. 2000). See Appendix. Rehearing was denied without discussion on January 29, 2002; issuance of the mandate was stayed, however, until March 7, 2002, pending filing of the present petition. See Appendix.

III. Basis for Federal Jurisdiction in the Court of First Instance

Tarek Elagamy herein seeks review of the decision by the Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit on his Petition for Review taken from the administrative decision by the Board of Immigration Appeals ("BIA") in deportation proceedings. The Fifth Circuit's jurisdiction was invoked under former 8 U.S.C. Sect. 1105a(a), which established the exclusive procedure for judicial review of such administrative decisions under then-applicable law.

REASONS RELIED ON FOR ISSUANCE OF THE WRIT

This Court should grant certiorari in this case in order to correct the nationwide conflict caused by the BIA's failure to follow Astrero outside the Ninth Circuit, and by the conflict found by the Fifth Circuit in the present case between Astrero and its decision in Gonzalez-Torres, supra.

The Ninth Circuit has followed Astrero repeatedly and consistently. See, e.g., Otarola v. INS, 270 F.3d 1272 (9th Cir. 2001), Guadalupe-Cruz v. INS, 240 F.3d 1209 (9th Cir. 2001), and Castillo-Perez v. INS, 212 F.3d 518 (9th Cir. 2000). The Fifth Circuit, as noted, found in the present matter that Gonzalez-Torres was controlling precedent contrary to Astrero. Petitioner maintained below, and still believes, that these two decisions are readily distinguishable. If the Fifth Circuit's position be accepted, however, there is a direct conflict between the Fifth and Ninth Circuits on this issue.

A nationwide conflict exists in any event, as the BIA emphatically refuses to follow Astrero and progeny outside the Ninth Circuit. The fact that there are at least four published opinions (as cited above) on this issue since 1996 shows that this is not a trivial or seldom-encountered controversy. This Court should therefore intervene by granting certiorari, in order to ensure the uniform application of law throughout the country.

ORAL DECISION OF THE IMMIGRATION JUDGE

The respondent is a 39 year old married male native and citizen of Egypt, pursuant to Order to Show Cause. Respondent is alleged to have entered the United States at New York, New York, on or about the 15th of May, 1982. The respondent was convicted in the United States District Court, Eastern District of Louisiana for Section 1546 of Title 18 of the United States Code. The respondent admitted some of the allegations in the Order to Show Cause, however, contested the matter of conviction and the charge. Deportability was established which is clear, convincing and unequivocal. The respondent designated the Honduras as the country of deportation and asked for the relief in the form of political asylum, withholding of deportation and adjustment of status. In view of the fact that the respondent does not have an approved 1-130 the adjustment of status is no longer before this Court. It is noted for the record that this proceeding, this matter of this record, was destroyed in a fire that took place in the Oakdale Alien Detention Facility in the latter part of November, 1987, when the fire consumed the entire facility to include the Court building. All the records of the Court were destroyed and this is one of the records that was destroyed. The proceeding was started anew. The order to Show Cause is a copy as are some other documents in the record. The applicant filed the application for relief, 589, and supporting documents were forwared to the State Department for an advisory opinion. That advisory opinion will be found in Exhibit 4. Exhibit 5 in this case is the conviction record, number 6 is the indictment. The hearing on the merits of the relief application took place on the 20th day of April, 1988 in New Orleans, Louisiana. At that hearing the respondent testified that he was born in Cairo, Egypt and that he received his Bachelor of Science degree in accounting at Ain Shams University in Egypt with a B.S. in accounting. The respondent came to the United States to seek a masters Degree in business in accounting, however, the respondent did not complete his education for higher learning in the United States.

The respondent subsequently married, divorced, and is now married to his current wife. The respondent's wife is a Christian, she has two children by a previous marriage and respondent testified that if he returns to Egypt with his Christian wife she will have a hard time in Cairo. He points out that Egyptians don't like Christians as they are members of the Moslem faith and if he goes back he will be rejected by his family and his family has informed him that he will not be able to live in the house. The housing situation in Cairo is critical and in Egypt is critical and therefore the respondent will have difficulty in finding a home, won't be able to live at his house, he can't afford housing and he will incur some discrimination. The respondent's wife is a non-believer or some would call an infidel. There are some Moslem fanatics who are against U.S. people and also against people of the Moslem faith marrying Christians. The respondent, himself, is a self proclaimed Moslem fanatic and he says as a result of the fact that he is and he has married a Christian, this would put him in some difficulties. He states that he would face persecution and most certainly discrimination should he return home. probably from the government. He states that his step-children may stay in the United States because their father does not like him being a Moslem and would probably not allow them to go to Egypt and if they did they would not be discriminated in school, however, they would find it difficult. He also states that there are four reigning groups in his country that don't like Americans and also states the fact that President Sadat was assassinated and probably because of his ties with America. The respondent has evidently been told by his parents that he can't live in his home with his Christian wife.

However, to establish eligibility for withholding of deportation pursuant to Section 243 (h) of the Act. An alien must show a clear probability of persecution in the country designated for deportation on account of race, religion, nationality, membership in a particular social group or political opinion. An alien must show that it is more likely than not that he would be subject to persecution on one of the grounds specified.

An application for asylum under Section 208 must meet the definition of a refugee which requires him to show persecution or a well-founded fear of persecution in a particular country on account of race, religion, nationality, membership in a particular social group or political opinion. The statutory standard requires the alien to show that he possesses a well-founded fear of persecution by establishing a reasonable person in circumstances would fear persecution if he were to be returned to his native country. A reasonable person may well fear persecution even where it is likely significant and clearly probable. It is noted that the well-founded fear standared requires a lesser degree of proof than the clear probability standard. In this particular case, the respondent bases his application upon the fact that he is a Moslem, the fact that he is now married to a Christian and as a result of this that people will discriminate and persecute him based on this marriage.

However, the respondent does bear the burden of proof in both the asylum and withholding applications to establish by evidence that he has a well-founded fear of persecution or that his life or freedom would be threatened on any of the five grounds of persecution previously enumerated in 8 C.F.R. 208.5. Now in this particular case the respondent has not stated that he has ever been persecuted or that any acts of persecution have been directed against him to date. It appears that respondent's fears and concerns right now are speculative in nature. The respondent has stated that his family would possibly turn him out and that he would face discrimination as a result of his marriage to his wife and possibly persecution. There are fanatic groups also there.

Now a showing of a well-founded fear of persecution usually requires the alien to present some objective evidence which establishes a realistic likelihood of persecution. The aliens own subjective speculations and conclusional statements unsupported by independent corroborative evidence usually will not suffice. However, if the alien's testimony is believable, consistent, sufficiently detailed to provide a plausible and coherent account of the basis for this fear this will be sufficient. In this case, the respondent's story is less than coherent, and sufficiently detailed to provide a plausible basis for that fear. The respondent states that he is married to a Christian, however, as he testifies it seems that there would be little difference in his case to think that he would face anymore discrimination then that faced by those in America who may bring home a Korean wife or a Jewish individual who marries a Christian or Christian marries a Jew or Protestant who married a Catholic or a Catholic who marries a Protestant or vice versa. Any time an individual marries another individual of a different culture as well as that of a different religion may certainly face some discrimination or different way of life. It would be difficult for anyone when they have two different cultures and two different faiths to make a successful marriage. However, the respondent states that his family would not accept him because of his Christian wife. That is not unusual for any family in America that the respondent would be returned home with the wife and child, the parents would turn him out. I know that usually an individual, when he gets married, is expected to live on his own and certainly not move in with the family. So I can't see that the respondent in this particular case would be any different from any other individual of the world where be would have to be expected to support his own wife and family.

The respondent testified that he may be possibly subjected to persecution and discrimination but he is not specific and talks about probability and possibilities. As I stated earlier, the burden of proof is upon the respondent to show that he faces a clear probability of persecution in his country, which in this case is Eqypt, on account of race which is not a factor, nationality and certain not membership in a particular social group, political opinion appears to be only be because his wife is a member of the Christian faith. Certainly the Court would conclude that no reasonable person in the respondent's shoes would fear persecution if he were to go to Egypt with a Christian family. He may face the same luck as anyone who brings home a foreign born wife whether it be in World War 11, Korea or Viet Nam. However, this certainly would not be persecution.

The court just cannot conceive how the respondent's assertions in Court could ever meet the standards of persecution set forth in 208 and 243 (h). It appears that the respondent's case is woefully inadequate and therefore does not meet the standards set forth by 208 and 243 (h).

Again, it is noted from the Country Rights Reports On Human Practices, 1987, that the Constitution of Egypt states it is an Islamic state which provides for freedom of religious expression and equality before the law regardless of religion. Egypt has a tradition of religious toleration and the authorities generally uphold the rights of religious minorities. Even Egyptian Jews who immigrated there years ago appear to be able to practice their faith without restrictions or harrassments. Synagogues and churches are routinely provided police protection. Various Protestant sects operate with significant Egyptian membership, while it does have smaller followers. Accordingly, it certainly appears that the respondent's fears would be speculative and without basis. Therefore, I find that the respondent is certainly not eligible for withholding and asylum. The respondent, because of his conviction, would not be eligible for voluntary departure and because of the fact that respondent does not have an approved 1-130 is certainly ineligible at this time for adjustment of status.

Therefore, it is ORDERED that the request for political asylum, withholding of deportation pursuant to Section 208, 243 (h) be denied and that the respondent be deported from the United States to Egypt on the charge contained in the Order to Show Cause.

APPEAL

ON BEHALF OF RESPONDENT:

David Kattan, Esquire
419 Gravier Street
New Orleans, Louisiana 70130

ON BEHALF OF SERVICE:

Richard Robinson
General Attorney

CHARGE:

Order: Sec. 241(a)(5), I&N Dec. [8 U.S.C. § 1251(a)(5)] - Convicted under section 1546 of Title 19 of t the United States Code

APPLICATION: Asylum; withholding of deportation

ORDER:

PER CURIAM. The decision of the immigration judge dated April 20, 1988, finding the respondent deportable pursuant to section 241(a)(5) of the Immigration and Nationality Act, 8 U.S.C. S 1251(a)(5), and denying his application for asylum and withholding of deportation pursuant to sections 208(a) and 243(h) of the Act, respectively, is affirmed.

The respondent testified that he feared returning to Egypt because he had married a United States citizen who is a Christian. In this regard, the respondent testified that there is a lot of anti-American sentiment in Egypt, and that both of them would face discrimination and persecution in Egypt by the government and by Moslem fanatics - he for marrying a "non-believer," and his wife for being American and a Christian.

In denying the respondent's application for asylum and withholding of deportation, the immigration judge found the respondent's fears of persecution by the Egyptian government or Moslem fanatic groups to be speculative, and that while the respondent may face a certain amount of discrimination for marrying a Christian, such discrimination for marrying persons from different cultures or races widely exists in most countries, including the United States. The immigration judge took cognizance of the 1987 Department of State's Country Reports on Human Rights Practices in Egypt, noting that Egypt's constitution provides for freedom of religion and equality before the law regardless of religion, and that the country has a history of religious tolerance. The immigration judge then denied the respondent's application for voluntary departure based on the respondent's 1986 conviction.

On appeal, the respondent alleges that the immigration judge erroneously refused to order his deportation to Honduras after the respondent designated Honduras as country of deportation; erred by refusing to continue his deportation hearing to allow the respondent to appeal the district director's revocation of his approved immediate relative visa petition, or to present evidence that his marriage was bona fide; erred in finding that the respondent had not established a well-founded fear of returning to Egypt based on his marriage to a United States citizen, who is a Christian.

We have applied the applicable standards of proof set forth in Matter of Mogharrabi, 19 I&N Dec. 439 (BIA 1987), to the facts of this case and agree with the immigration judge that the respondent has failed to establish either a well-founded fear of persecution or a clear probability of persecution in returning to Egypt.

We find the respondent's testimony to be cursory and vague, and unsubstantiated in its entirety. The respondent referred to "Moslem fanatics" that might object to his marriage, and also referred to possible government persecution on the same basis. However, except for the respondent's cursory testimony, there is no evidence of record that the government of Egypt persecutes its citizens on the basis of religion, or that the Egyptian government either tolerates or would be unable to control any group or groups of Moslem zealots who would wish to harm the respondent on account of his marriage. In actuality, it is apparent that the respondent really fears ostracism from his family and the reality of the hardships in Egypt for marrying a person from a different culture with different religious beliefs. However, as the immigration judge pointed out, such recriminations are not persecutory in nature, but are based on prejudice, bigotry, and an intolerance for cultural diversity, for which the Act will not afford its protections. In effect, the respondent has not rebutted the State Department's Advisory Opinion which opines that the respondent has not presented any evidence that he faces the likelihood of persecution upon his return to Egypt. 8 C.F.R. § 208.10(b) (1988).

Next, we agree with the immigration judge that the respondent was raising an issue collateral to his deportation proceedings when he wished to continue his hearing in order to appeal the district director's revocation of his approved immediate relative visa petition. In essence, even having an approved visa petition vests no rights in the alien in remaining in the United States, and does not prevent the deportation of the alien. See Perales v. Casillas, 903 F.2d 1043 (5th Cir. 1990); Matter of Merced, 14 I&N Dec. 644 (BIA 1974). See also Oluyemi v. INS, 902 F.2d 1032 (lst Cir. 1990); Joseph v. Landon, 679 F.2d 113 (7th Cir. 1982); Menezes v. INS, 601 F.2d 1028 (9th Cir. 1979).

Finally, we agree with the respondent that the immigration judge erred in ordering his deportation to Egypt. We note that the respondent requested deportation to Honduras. While the respondent has no ties to that country, section 243(a) of the Act, 8 U.S.C. § 1253(a), allows an alien to designate any country of deportation unless such designation is prejudicial to the interests of the United States. The Service has shown no such prejudice. Consequently, the Board will designate Honduras as the country of deportation in this case.

Accordingly, based on the foregoing, the appeal is dismissed.

FURTHER ORDER: The respondent is ordered deported to Honduras pursuant to section 241(a)(5) of the Act, as charged.

FURTHER ORDER: In the event Honduras does not accept the respondent, the respondent is ordered deported to Egypt.

ON BEHALF OF
RESPONDENT: Lawrence B. Fabacher II, Esquire

ON BEHALF OF
SERVICE: Agnelis L. Reese
General Attorney

CHARGE:

Order: Sec. 241(a)(5), I&N Act [8 U.S.C. S 1251(a)(5)]-
Convicted under 18 U.S.C. § 1546

APPLICATION: Reopening

The respondent filed a motion requesting the Board to reopen his deportation hearing in order to apply for suspension of deportation pursuant to section 244(a)(2) of the Immigration and Nationality Act, 8 U.S.C. § 1254(a)(2). The motion to reopen will be denied.

In support of his motion to reopen, the respondent submitted an Application for Suspension of Deportation (Form I-2§6A), a letter dated February 25, 1993, from the City of Lafayette Police Department, a copy of his marriage certificate, three affidavits from individuals attesting to his good moral character, and twenty- seven letters from business associates attesting to his good moral character. The respondent also submitted, inter alia, an estimate of his business investments in the United States and a copy of his certificate of trade name (Quality Oil Change & Tune-up).

A motion to reopen must, among other things, state new facts to be considered at the reopened hearing and must be supported by previously unavailable, material evidence. See 8 C.F.R. §§ 3.2, 3.8(a), 242.22. The alien also must establish prima facie eligibility for the relief sought before a motion to reopen will be granted. INS v. Doherty, U.S. _, 112 S.Ct. 719 (1992); INS v. Abudu, 485 U.S. 94 (1988); Matter of Ruiz, interim Decision 3116 (BIA 1989). The Board has discretion to deny a motion to reopen even if the alien has made out a prima facie case for relief. INS v. Doherty, supra. Moreover, a party who seeks to reopen proceedings bears a "heavy burden" of proving that if the proceedings before the immigration judge were reopened, the new evidence would likely change the result in the case.

See Matter of Coelho, Interim Decision 3172 (BIA 1992); see also INS v. Doherty, supra; INS v. Abudu, supra.

The record reflects that the respondent was convicted on September 10, 1986, under 18 U.S.C. § 1546 (Exh. 5). On April 20, 1988, an immigration judge found the respondent deportable as charged under section 241(a)(5) of the Act, 8 U.S.C. § 1251(a)(5). [1] As a result of the respondent's criminal offense he is ineligible for suspension of deportation unless he qualifies under section 244(a)(2) of the Act. In order to demonstrate statutory eligibility for suspension of deportation under section 244(a)(2) of the Act, the respondent must establish that he:

> has been physically present in the United States for a continuous period of not less than 10 years immediately following the commission of an act . . . constituting a ground for deportation, and proves that during all of such period he has been and is a person of good moral character; and is a person whose deportation would, in the opinion of the Attorney General, result in exceptional and extremely unusual hardship to the alien . . . .

We have held that the 10-year period is measured trom the date of the conviction. See Matter of Lozada, 19 1&N Dec. 637, 640 (BIA 1988) ; Matter of P-, 6 I&N Dec. 788 (BIA 1955) ; see also Brown v. INS, 856 F.2d 728, 731 (5th Cir. 1988). However, in a supplemental brief in support of the motion to reopen, counsel for the respondent argues that our holding in Lozada, supra, is incorrect and leads to a harsh result. Counsel's argument that the 10-year period should be measured from the commission of the offense instead of the date of the conviction is unpersuasive. Although the commission of the act may have occurred in 1983, it did not become "a ground for deportation" until the respondent was convicted of that act on September 10, 1986. See section 241(a)(5) of the Act. Therefore, 10 years from the date of the conviction constituting the ground of deportation have not yet elapsed.

Accordingly, although we note the many positive character references included in the respondent's motion, the respondent is unable to demonstrate statutory eligibility for reopening. Therefore, it would serve no purpose to reopen this record to permit him to apply for suspension of deportation.

Accordingly, based on the foregoing, the motion to reopen will be denied.

ORDER: The motion to reopen is denied.

IN DEPORTATION PROCEEDINGS

MOTION

ON BEHALF OF
RESPONDENT: Lawrence B. Fabacher 11, Esquire
833 Baronne Street
New Orleans, Louisiana 70113

CHARGE:

Order: Sec. 241(a)(5), I&N Act [8 U.S.C. § 1251(a)(5)]-
Convicted under 18 U.S. C. § 1546

APPLICATION: Reopening

ORDER:

PER CURIAM. In a decision dated April 20, 1988, an Immigration Judge denied the respondent's application for asylum and withholding of deportation under sections 208(a) and 243(h) of the Immigration and Nationality Act, 8 U.S.C. §§ 1158(a) and 1253(h). In a decision dated June 24, 1992, we affirmed the Immigration Judge's decision. The respondent filed a motion to reopen to apply for suspension of deportation under section 244(a)(2) of the Act, 8 U.S.C. § 1254(a)(2). In a decision dated February 9, 1995, we denied the motion to reopen. The respondent now submits another motion to reopen to apply for suspension of deportation. The Immigration and Naturalization Service has not responded. The motion will be denied.

We may deny a motion to reopen that fails to establish a prima facie case for the relief sought. See INS v. Doherty, 502 U.S. 314 (1992); Matter of L-O-G-, Interim Decision 3281 (BIA 1996). In order to qualify for suspension of deportation, an alien must establish that he has been physically present in the United States for a continuous period of at least 10 years, that he has been a person of good moral character during such period, and that his deportation would result in exceptional and extremely unusual hardship to himself or to his spouse, parent, or child who is a citizen or lawful permanent resident of the United States. See section 244(a)(2) of the Act.

We find that Matter of N-J-B-, Interim Decision 3309 (BIA 1997), controls the outcome of this case. In Matter of N-J-B, supra, we held that the under the provisions of the Illegal Reform and Immigrant Responsibility Act of 1996, enacted as Division C of the Departments of Commerce, Justice, and State, and the Judiciary Appropriations Act for 1997, Pub. L. No. 104-208, 110 Stat.. 3009, __ ("IIRIRA"), service of the Order to Show Cause ends the period of continuous physical presence for suspension of deportation purposes. [1] Inasmuch as the respondent was served with an Order to Show Cause prior to his acquisition of the 10 years' continuous physical presence, he is ineligible for suspension of deportation.

Accordingly, the motion is denied.

Petition for Review of an Order of the Board of Immigration Appeals
BIA No. A26 440 666

Before DAVIS, BENAVIDES and STEWART,
Circuit Judges.
PER CURIAM:*

Tarek Elagamy has filed a petition for review of the Board of Immigration Appeals, ("BIA") order denying his motion to reopen deportation proceedings. Elagamy argues that the BIA erred in determining that he was not entitled to suspension of deportation because he had been served with an order to show cause prior to acquiring ten years of physical presence in the United States following his conviction for knowingly making a false statement under oath in connection with a visa application. Specifically, Elagamy contends that: (1) the BIA incorrectly decided In re N-J-B, Int. Dec. 3309 (BIA 1997) so that the stoptime rule of the Illegal Immigration Reform and Immigrant Responsibility Act ("IIRIRA"), as amended by the Nicaraguan Adjustment and Central American Relief Act ("NACARA"), does not end an alien's physical presence with the service of an order to show cause; (2) even if In re N-J-B was correctly decided, it does not prevent him from beginning a new residence period after the Order to Show Cause has been issued; and (3) the BIA erred in retroactively applying the IIRIRA's stoptime rule to his case.

* Pursuant to 5th CIR. R. 47.5, the court has determined that this opinion should not be published and is not precedent except under the limited circumstances set forth in 5th CIR R. 47.5.4.

This court reviews the BIA's legal determinations de novo. See Carbajal-Gonzalez v. INS, 78 F.3d 194, 197 (5th Cir. 1996). Elagamy does not provide any analysis or cite to any legal authority in support of his first argument. Accordingly, this argument is deemed abandoned. See American States Ins. Co. V. Bailey, 133 F.3d 363, 372 (5th Cir. 1998); see Also Yohey v. Collins, 985 F.2d 222, 225 (5th Cir, 1993)(only issues presented and argued in the brief are addressed on appeal).

Elagamy's second argument was rejected in McBride v. INS, 238 F.3d 371, 376-77 (5th Cir. 2001), which upheld a BIA ruling providing that the stop-time rule prohibits the restarting of the accrual time-period after deportation proceedings have begun, that the issuance of a show-cause order tolls the physical presence period in a suspension-of-deportation case. Elagamy's contention that the stop-time provisions should not be retroactively applied to his case has likewise been foreclosed by Gonzalez-Torres v. INS, 213 F.3d 899, 903 (5th Cir. 2000), in which we held that the IIRIRA's tolling provision applies to show-cause orders in deportation proceedings, like in Elagamy's case, that were pending at the time the IIRIRA was enacted.

Elagamy's petition for review is DENIED.
